

Attention, Fellow Americans!

There's a wall
You can't see it, but it's there
Leaving us trapped and caged
Separated by class, creed, circumstance
Melting pot, so they say
But we all know that's not true
It takes hope and freedom and love, lots of love, to chip away at the stones between us,
Move the mountains obscuring our view,
Hiding the beauty of humanity and the truth behind the lies
Keeping us apart

Like an arrow hitting its target, a finger points
You did this
You're the cause
You're the problem
But we all know that's not true
That's not us,
Not the U.S. we want to be

It's hate and it's fear, it's darkness and merely
A state from here to there,
When light comes to shine again,
And only we are the answer to letting it slip through the cracks and find its place

And with each word, each stroke, each note, is a current that breaks free from where it was kept within,
Flowing towards the wall that binds us
And with each current is a flood, and each flood is an ocean, and each ocean is a world,
The world so often thought of as impossible

But it's not

So break the wall

And find what's beyond, because

It is truth and it is beautiful